

Figure 5-12. The Percoll centrifugation method (left) separates viable cells from defective sperm and other seminal debris. The swim-up procedure (right) simply involves placing a sample of semen in a test tube and carefully layering an appropriate media on top; motile spermatozoa are collected from the (upper) media and concentrated.